

Change on the Endress+Hauser Supervisory Board

Sandra Genge succeeds Hans-Peter Endress as new representative of the family

A change is taking place on the Supervisory Board at the Endress+Hauser Group. Hans-Peter Endress is leaving the board after reaching the age limit of 75. Taking his place is Sandra Genge, a granddaughter of company founder Dr Georg H Endress. Together with Dr Klaus Endress, she will be representing the interests of the shareholder family on the Supervisory Board.

Sandra Genge (born 1977) studied communications sciences and is a federally certified marketing and communications manager in Switzerland. Ms Genge, a mother of three, was the managing director of an advertising agency for many years and today works as a freelance communications consultant. She has represented the younger generation of the shareholder family on the Family Council since 2006. This advisory body serves as the link between the family and company and makes important decisions regarding the relationship between the shareholders and the Group.

Ms Genge has prepared extensively for her new responsibilities in recent years. She has attended Supervisory Board sessions and events for some time now, and also participated in the annual strategy meetings between representatives of the family and Group management. “The professionalism and passion that people bring to Endress+Hauser is what motivates me to get involved in the company,” said Sandra Genge.

Younger generation of the shareholder family assumes responsibility

“We planned this succession, which the family unanimously approved, many years in advance,” emphasizes Klaus Endress, President of the Supervisory Board. “This will enable a smooth transition of responsibilities.” The younger generation is meanwhile playing an increasingly important role in the company, such as in the Family Council, where it has five of the nine current members. The Family Council is furthermore firmly in female hands with six women and three men from the Endress family making up this advisory body.
